ABSTRACT

Regional autonomy has been carried out giving a greater role to the Government and local economic actors in managing development in the area. Through decentralization, local governments have the authority to explore the role of the allocation of income and perform independently in setting development priorities .

Revenue (PAD) is an important benchmark for determining the level of local capacity in implementing real autonomy and responsibility .

This study aims to determine how much influence the government expenditure and GDP affect local revenues in Ketapang . The independent variables consist of : Government Spending and GDP while the dependent variable is the original income . The analytical method used was linear regression analysis . Government Spending result is not significant positive effect on local revenues , and GDP is significantly positively affect local revenue (PAD) . Whereas with GDP , government spending is significantly positive effect on revenue (PAD)
