Civic education and citizenship studies in culture, identity, and art

Sulistyarini¹, Jagad Aditya Dewantara², Muhammad Mona Adha³

¹² Departement of Civic Education, Universitas Tanjungpura, Indonesia
³ Departement of Civic Education, Universitas Lampung, Lampung, Indonesia

jagad02@fkip.untan.ac.id

Over the past few years, culture has played an essential role in shaping civic culture in multicultural countries that adhere to the nation-state system, such as Indonesia. Culture makes an excellent contribution to support the nation’s noble values, traditions, and norms that inspire forms of citizenship in civic culture. We need to think about civic education and the study of citizenship in the scope of culture, identity, and the arts. However, strangely, there has been no effort made by academic actors to study culture, identity, and art in certain areas in the aspect of forming civic culture. Culture, identity, and art are the primary sources of inspiration for a country that adheres to a multicultural system and a nation-state to create social norms for its citizens. The issue is expected to cover as many aspects of customary law, culture, art, and nature as possible and be reported as scientific findings. Authors and scholars from all relevant disciplines are invited to contribute, and we are interested in your research contribution to pertinent illustrations of the fields of civic education and civic studies. The editorial team reviews the specific and cultural roles, identities, and traditional arts as described in the forms of customary law and norms in multicultural societies, performing arts where local culture and identity play an essential role, literature, and folklore in society and history engraved on reliefs. Reliefs such as temples in Yogyakarta, books such as Sutasoma, and the like. We want researchers to write about how culture, identity, and art have played a role in the essential parts of citizenship from the past to the present. In essence, this Special Editorial accommodates writers and academics to conceptualize the role, philosophy, customary law, tradition, norms, and artistic aesthetics as forming civic culture in a country that adheres to the nation’s system so that it becomes a new form of knowledge that can be taken for civic education and studies, citizenship itself.

Civic education and citizenship studies have become increasingly important topics in education in the current era of globalization. Both topics... discuss how citizens should understand their rights and responsibilities in a democratic society. However, in the context of culture, identity, and art, these two topics have significant implications for shaping citizens' thinking and behavior. Culture, identity, and art play a crucial role in shaping an individual's perspective and behavior. Through the civic education and citizenship studies approach, individuals can gain a better understanding of their role in a pluralistic and multicultural society. This is essential to ensure that the community has sufficient awareness of democracy, human rights, and equality (Martono et al., 2021).

In this regard, art has a significant role as a means of communication and unifying the community. Art can serve as a platform for individuals to express their views on various social, political, and cultural issues. Additionally, art can also help strengthen the identity of individuals and the community, thereby increasing their participation in the democratic process. This research aims to explore how civic education and citizenship studies can be applied in the context of culture, identity, and art. We will examine various aspects such as public policy, education, community participation, as well as the role of art and culture in strengthening democratic awareness and citizenship identity. Therefore, this study is expected to provide a significant contribution in understanding how civic education and citizenship studies can be applied in a broader context, and how art and culture can help strengthen identity and democratic awareness in society.

The Role of Culture, Identity, and Art in Civic Education and Citizenship Studies

The role of culture, identity, and art in civic education and citizenship studies is increasingly important in the current era of globalization. This topic discusses how citizens should understand their rights and responsibilities in a democratic society, but also how culture, identity, and art can shape an individual's perspectives and behaviors as a responsible citizen. Culture, identity, and art have a significant influence in shaping individuals' outlook and behavior. Civic education and citizenship studies provide an approach to help individuals gain a better understanding of their roles in a pluralistic and multicultural society. Civic and citizenship education can help individuals understand the values of democracy, human rights, and equality.
Art plays a crucial role as a means of communication and uniting communities. Through art, individuals can express their views on various social, political, and cultural issues (Olendo et al., 2022). Art can also help strengthen individual and societal identities, thereby enhancing their participation in the democratic process. This research will explore how culture, identity, and art can contribute to the realization of civic education and citizenship studies. Various aspects will be examined, such as public policy, education, community participation, as well as the role of art and culture in reinforcing awareness of democracy and citizens' identity. The findings of this research are expected to make a significant contribution to understanding how culture, identity, and art can contribute to the realization of civic education and citizenship studies, as well as enhancing awareness of democracy and citizens' identity in society (Smith et al., 2017).

Enhancing Civic Education and Citizenship Studies through Cultural and Artistic Approaches

Civic education and citizenship studies are two essential topics in education that aim to teach individuals about their roles and responsibilities in a democratic society (Casmana et al., 2022). As the world becomes more globalized and diverse, it is important to enhance civic education and citizenship studies to ensure that individuals understand the importance of their participation in society. One approach to enhancing these topics is through cultural and artistic approaches.

Culture and art play significant roles in shaping individual perspectives and behaviors. By using cultural and artistic approaches, educators can create more engaging and interactive learning experiences for students (Fatmawati & Dewantara, 2022). Through these approaches, students can learn about the diverse perspectives and experiences of individuals from different cultural backgrounds. This helps to develop empathy and understanding, which are crucial components of civic education and citizenship studies.

Incorporating cultural and artistic approaches into civic education and citizenship studies also helps to strengthen students' identities as citizens. Culture and art have the power to celebrate and acknowledge individuals' diverse identities and experiences. This, in turn, helps students to appreciate and embrace their own identities while also fostering respect and appreciation for others. Through this process, students can develop a sense of pride and belonging in their communities, which is essential for active citizenship.

One way to enhance civic education and citizenship studies through cultural and artistic approaches is by incorporating multicultural perspectives into the curriculum. This involves including literature, art, and music from diverse cultures to teach about different values, beliefs, and experiences. By learning about the experiences and perspectives of others, students can develop empathy and an understanding of the interconnectedness of their lives with those of others.

In addition, using cultural and artistic approaches can help to create more interactive and engaging classroom experiences. For instance, students can engage in hands-on activities that incorporate cultural and artistic practices. This can include creating art or music inspired by different cultures or participating in cultural festivals and events. These activities help to make the learning experience more enjoyable and meaningful for students.

Another approach to enhancing civic education and citizenship studies through cultural and artistic approaches is by involving students in community-based projects that promote civic engagement. This can include organizing cultural and art events that celebrate diversity and promote social justice. By participating in these events, students can learn about the importance of civic engagement and become active participants in their communities.

Furthermore, cultural and artistic approaches can be used to teach students about social and political issues. For instance, educators can use art and literature to teach about historical events such as the civil rights movement or current social justice issues. This helps students to understand the role of civic engagement in addressing social and political issues.

In conclusion, enhancing civic education and citizenship studies through cultural and artistic approaches is an effective way to promote active citizenship and strengthen students’ identities. By incorporating multicultural perspectives into the curriculum, creating interactive and engaging classroom experiences, involving students in community-based projects, and using art and literature to teach about social and political issues, educators can create a more inclusive and dynamic learning environment. Through these approaches, students can develop the skills and knowledge necessary to become active, engaged, and responsible citizens in a diverse and democratic society.

Conclusion

In conclusion, the article discusses the significant role of culture, identity, and art in shaping civic education and citizenship studies in the context of multicultural societies. The study recognizes the importance of culture in supporting the nation's noble values, traditions, and norms that inspire forms of citizenship in civic culture. However, there has been a lack of effort by academic actors to study culture, identity, and art in certain areas in the aspect of forming civic culture, which is expected to cover as many aspects of customary law, culture, art, and nature as possible and be reported as scientific findings.

Civic education and citizenship studies are vital topics in education, especially in a pluralistic and multicultural society. These two topics discuss how citizens should understand their rights and responsibilities in a democratic society. In the context of culture, identity, and art, these two topics have significant implications for shaping citizens' thinking and behavior. Culture, identity, and art play a crucial role in shaping an individual's perspective and behavior. Through the civic education and citizenship studies approach, individuals can gain a better understanding of their role in a multicultural society. This is important to ensure that the community has sufficient awareness of democracy, human rights, and equality.

Art and culture have a significant role in civic education and citizenship studies as a means of communication and unifying the community. Art can serve as a platform for individuals to express their views on various social, political, and cultural issues. Additionally, art can also help strengthen the identity of individuals and the community, thereby increasing their participation in the democratic process. The study aims to explore how civic education and citizenship studies can be applied in the context of culture, identity, and art. It will examine various aspects such as public policy, education, community participation, as well as the role of art and culture in strengthening democratic awareness and citizenship identity.

In conclusion, this study aims to provide a significant contribution to understanding how civic education and citizenship studies can be applied in a broader context, and how art and culture can help strengthen identity and democratic awareness in society. It is important for scholars and researchers from all relevant disciplines to contribute to this field of study, providing pertinent illustrations of the fields of civic education and civic studies. By recognizing the importance of culture, identity, and art in shaping civic education and citizenship studies, individuals can gain a better understanding of their role in a democratic society, thus creating a more equitable and just community for all.

References

